Gov. Quinn called Monday for an overhaul of the proposed widespread gambling expansion at a news conference at the Thompson Center.

E. JASON WAMBSGANS/TRIBUNE

3 FOR ALL

“I would certainly veto this bill if it ever arrives. ... It’s better to go back and start over and do it right.”

—Gov. Quinn

“You’ve got an industry that’s hanging on by thread, and he turned his back to it.”

—Former Republican Gov. Jim Edgar, who owns and races several horses in Illinois and Indiana.

“The mayor is anxious to sit down and discuss how we get a deal done. ... We need to look at the details of the governor’s proposal, which at this moment we don’t have.”

—Emanuel spokeswoman Chris Mather

DEAL BREAKER?

QUINN DEALS SEVERE BLOW TO MAJOR GAMBLING EXPANSION

Chicago Tribune

Gov. Quinn on Monday dealt a severe blow to a major gambling expansion effort that would bring a casino to Chicago, ticking off a lengthy list of changes he wants before he’ll sign off.

One demand emerged as a deal breaker: stripping out a provision that would place slot machines at horse racing tracks.

Without that plum, supporters said, the carefully cultivated alliance that allowed the gambling package to narrowly pass during the waning days of spring session will fall apart. If that happens, an estimated $1 billion a year for schools, public works projects and local government would not materialize.

Negotiations on new legislation could start next week, when lawmakers are scheduled to return to Springfield. Senators are prepared to offer a rewrite, but it’s likely to take much longer for legislators and Quinn to reach a consensus.

Quinn’s proposal drew measured responses from Senate President John Cullerton and Mayor Emanuel, who lobbied lawmakers to vote for the gambling legislation. Emanuel pledged to use revenue from a Chicago casino to rebuild the city’s crumbling infrastructure.

The governor said he’s OK with the five additional casinos called for in the legislation, with one exception: He wants regulators to decide on a casino location in Lake County. The bill currently gives that honor to the tiny town of Park City, along with Chicago, Rockford, Danville and Cook County’s south suburbs.

Quinn indicated he wouldn’t sign off on anything that doesn’t follow his framework. Quinn said the important thing is not whether a bill could pass, but if it is good for the state.

“The bottom line is, I’m the goalie,” Quinn said. “I have the final word, and we’re not going to have a willy-nilly gambling bill in Illinois that is not protecting integrity, that is way too big and excessive, and doesn’t provide adequate revenue for education.”

GOING PUBLIC

Tracy Swartz

» @tracyswartz

Christmas has come early to the Red and Green lines. Some stops on the northern section of the Red Line will be getting face-lifts, while the Green Line may see two new stations soon. Going Public looks at which areas are celebrating Xmass transit.

IN THE RED ZONE

» Save for some finishing touches, work on the Grand Red Line stop on the Near North Side is expected to be completed by year's end, Chicago Department of Transportation spokesman Brian Steele said. The stop, which cost $67 million to redo, has a new mezzanine and granite floors and stairs.

» The Chicago Metropolitan Agency for Planning, a transportation planning council, last week approved funds to renovate the Clark/Division stop on the Near North Side. Construction on the project, which is slated to top $102 million, is expected to begin next year, Steele said.

» The Wilson stop in Uptown last week won $6 million in federal funding for an elevator inside the stationhouse and exterior rehabilitation.

» The Loyola stop in Rogers Park was awarded $11 million in federal funds in July to move its station entrance north and create a pedestrian plaza. Construction is expected to begin in the spring.

streets on the Green and Pink lines is 40 percent complete, Steele said. "The basic steel structure and foundation is in place," Steele said. The West Loop stop, which is slated to cost $38 million to renovate, is scheduled to open in summer 2012.

» Mayor Emanuel floated a plan last week to levy a $2-a-day parking fee to pay for a new stop on the Green Line by Cermak Road near McCormick Place. The Regional Transportation Authority, the funding arm for the CTA and Metra, launched a study in 2008 to evaluate the possibilities of a Green Line stop at 18th Street or Cermak.

The study determined that Cermak station entrances could be located at Cermak Road, mid-block between Cermak and 23rd Street, and at 23rd Street.

Also proposed were streetscape enhancements including creating a bike and pedestrian trail between the Red Line and the Metra line by the Chinatown-Cermak stop heading north from Cermak. The study estimated construction would cost upward of $50 million.

DRAWING OUTSIDE THE LINES

The Chicago Architecture Foundation's Design on the Edge exhibit, which features a re-imagined Red Line, debuted last month and will be open through July 1.

Cash-strapped Chicagoans trading up to the good life

By Tracy Swartz | REDEYE

Jerry Gardner of the South Loop has been cutting, coloring and lengthening hair for three years, but accepting cash for these services isn't always his style.

For two years, Gardner has traded haircuts for a number of goods and services including custom clothes and promotional services (Web design, publicity shots) for his business, Hair by Jay Le'Andre.

He said about 15 percent of his clientele are barter customers.

"Most of the time, people come to me," said Gardner, 20. "Instead of paying each other cash, it's, 'You do my website and I'll do so many blow outs.' It really depends on the value and worth of what you're seeking and how much it's going to cost you to barter."

He's not the only Chicagoan on the cutting edge. In this depressed economy, bartering is growing in popularity as some are swapping everything from hair treatments to music lessons to technical work for other goods and services. Statistics are difficult to track, but a Craigslist spokeswoman said the site's bartering section "has been doubling year by year." Meanwhile, more than 400 Chicagoland businesses are listed on itex.com, a barter marketplace.

Historically the way people received goods before cash was invented, bartering is experiencing something of a comeback, said Adam Galinsky, a negotiations professor in the Kellogg School of Management at Northwestern. It benefits the underemployed, who have time and energy to devote to performing tasks but lack a lot of money.

"Bartering becomes the perfect thing in any cash-strapped situation," Galinsky said.

But don't ditch your wallet quite yet. There are some drawbacks to bartering, Gardner said. Problems can include a lack of quality service from clients and awkwardness in relationships when barter agreements need to change.

Matt Brown is becoming acquainted with bartering and Chicago. When he moved here last month from Pennsylvania, a friend gave him a chair, an ottoman and two paintings to help decorate his new Ravenswood Manor apartment.

In exchange, Brown, an old-time fiddle and banjo teacher at the Old Town School of Folk Music, gave her a fiddle lesson, typically priced at $50-$60 for an hour session.

This wasn't the first time Brown bartered for goods. A few years ago, when he was here for a show, he met an Evanston chef who traded a couple of meals for fiddle instruction.

"It would seem like I cheated him, but I feel like we both came out of it feeling like we're blessed," said Brown, 27. "If I can trade my expertise for yours, it doesn't have to involve cash. I'm looking to do it more."

Andy Vazquez, 30, said he also wouldn't mind more bartering opportunities. The Lincoln Square resident provides a unique service: He can recover the photos you lose on your digital camera.

Vazquez said he typically mines digital cameras for 10 to 15 people each year as a hobby. (His day job is in insurance.)

For payment, Vazquez said he usually receives a $25 or $50 gift card to Best Buy or AMC theaters. A new memory card for the camera is much more expensive, Vazquez said.

Vazquez said his wife, too, barter as a hobby. She has created flyers for a band in

"I'm looking to trade for an iPod Touch, Evo 4G or something else of value."

“If I can trade my expertise for yours, it doesn’t have to involve cash. I’m looking to do it more.”

—Matt Brown, below, who has traded music instruction for goods exchange for show tickets and wedding invitations for a friend as her gift to the couple.

Vazquez said he didn’t ask for cash from one of his wife’s coworkers, who recently lost 300 digital photos of her wedding. Vazquez was able to find the photos, and the woman bought him lunch.

“A wedding is something once in a lifetime,” Vazquez said. “Any way you put it, it’s your honeymoon. You can’t put a price on that.”

But Gardner, the South Loop stylist, said he’s found that there are some things on which you have to put a price.

Gardner said he only accepts 80 percent of the bartering offers he receives because some—such as coupons and home cooked food—are not worth his time.

He said he’s learned there are some downsides to trading services.

“You’ve got to be really careful who you’re bartering with and what you’re bartering because some people try to cheat you,” Gardner said.

Sometimes those who barter services don’t put as much effort into the project as someone who is getting paid, Gardner said. Also, he now relies on contracts after a bad experience with a client who didn’t come through with photos.

Plus, it can get awkward when you want to turn the barter relationship into a cash exchange, Gardner said.

“I ask myself, ‘Can I afford to barter for this service or should I just decline the offer?’” Gardner said.

City sticker shock

Clean your windshield—old stickers could cost you

Chicago Tribune

As a transplant to Chicago, Bonnie King thought the city's annual vehicle stickers were "novel." So each year, she left the old city sticker on her car when she attached a new one.

Last week, the 32-year-old Albany Park resident was hit with a $120 ticket for having an improperly displayed sticker on her car. She said her 2011 sticker was adhered in the correct place, the lower passenger-side corner of the windshield, and wonders if she was ticketed because two old stickers were still in place.

"It seems to make no sense especially when I paid for the [current] sticker," she said of her ticket.

Ald. Richard Mell recently emailed residents in his 33rd Ward with a warning after one of his constituents apparently received a ticket for a similar infraction.

"Please don't get caught on a technicality!" Mell's email read. "Remove the old stickers, and make sure the new one is located in the correct position."

City law requires motorists place stickers "at the lower right-hand corner on the inside of the glass portion of the windshield of such motor vehicle." The ordinance also tells motorists they must follow the instructions on the sticker, which include removing the previous year's sticker.

"They tell you to do it, but I don't think it's really that clear you'd get a ticket if you don't do it," King said.

But Holly Stutz, deputy comptroller for the Department of Finance and Revenue, said the department doesn't ticket motorists who leave old stickers on their vehicle.

A spokesman for Chicago police, which issued the ticket to King, said he did not have the records on King's case and so could not comment.

But he said that in general the department may issue tickets if an officer feels a sticker, or stickers, are obstructing a driver's view, the spokesman said. Both that infraction, and one for improperly displaying a sticker, carry a $120 fine, the spokesman said.

There were 200,122 tickets issued to people who did not have a sticker or displayed a sticker improperly last year, according to Stutz. This year there were 134,262 tickets issued through Aug. 31.

President Obama discusses his jobs bill during a speech Monday to high school students in Millers Creek, N.C. MCT

Obama hits road to push jobs bill

4 MILLERS CREEK, N.C. President Obama sought on Monday to turn up the heat on Republicans for blocking his jobs bill as he started a campaign-style bus tour across states vital to his 2012 re-election chances.

Hitting the road again, this time in North Carolina and Virginia, Obama struck a populist tone and argued that Congress should pass at least parts of his $447 billion jobs package that was defeated as a whole last week.

"We're going to give members of Congress another chance to step up to the plate and do the right thing," Obama told a cheering crowd at the airport in Asheville, N.C., the starting point for his three-day trek in an armored bus.

As Senate Democrats prepared to force a vote this week on one of Obama's jobs proposals, which would give states money to employ teachers, the president mocked the Republicans who had blocked his original bill.

"Maybe they just couldn't understand the whole all at once," he said. "So we're going to break it up into bite-size pieces so they can take a thoughtful approach to this legislation."

The president's strategy is to force Republicans to accept his proposals or be painted as obstructionists getting in the way of economic recovery as the 2012 presidential and congressional campaigns heat up.

Republicans say Obama's jobs package is laden with wasteful spending and counterproductive tax hikes for wealthier Americans.

That impasse makes it unlikely that any major steps to spur hiring will be passed before the 2012 election, when Obama will be judged for his economic stewardship.

Anger mismanagement

It's no secret that athletes and coaches can have short fuses, even when the games aren't being contested. Yet lately it seems there's more hostility floating around than usual. Here's a look at who's been hot under the collar. REDEYE, TRIBUNE CONTRIBUTED

Is Cutler channeling Cee Lo Green?

1 Boiling point: The Bears have blown through plenty of timeouts when they've been delayed getting the play in to Jay Cutler, and the quarterback's frustration was raised late in the first half Sunday.
Quotable: "Tell him I said [bleep] you." —Cutler, as picked up by NBC cameras and microphones during Sunday's game

Harris wants out if he's gonna sit

2 Boiling point: After being benched before this week's win over Minnesota, Bears safety Chris Harris requested a trade; the NFL deadline to make a deal is 3 p.m. Tuesday.
Quotable: "I requested a trade, I sure did. ... If there's no trade made, I'm still going to be a Chicago Bear, and I'm going to go to work every day and conduct myself accordingly, the way I should and be professional about it." —Harris, on "The Waddle & Silvy Show" on ESPN 1000

Coaches are combatants too

3 Boiling point: Detroit coach Jim Schwartz took exception to an exuberant handshake and slap on the back from San Francisco coach Jim Harbaugh on Sunday. Schwartz ended up chasing Harbaugh to the tunnel.
Quotable: "It's unfortunate. The game is played by players on the field. We don't want things like that to occur, but there are competitive people in this league. We need to do a better job of leaving it on the field." —Schwartz

Money talks—and argues

4 Boiling point: The NBA and players' association are ready to try mediation. If there's no resolution to the labor strife by Tuesday, Commissioner David Stern has said there might not be NBA basketball on Christmas.
Quotable: "Everybody know it's not our fault. If it was up to us, we'd be out there playing. I think it's wrong. I know they can easily take care of it and not take advantage of people." —Derrick Rose

ANGER INTENSITY

It's uncertain whom Cutler's mad at, but it doesn't seem minor.

ANGER INTENSITY

If Harris is really miffed, he seems content to keep it to himself.

ANGER INTENSITY

They'll forget all about this by Thursday.

ANGER INTENSITY

The Dwyane Wade-David Stern dustup proves there are serious issues here.

Jay's brain is a scary place to be

Chris Sosa

Through proprietary RedEye technology, we collected Jay Cutler's thoughts from Sunday's win over Minnesota. Reader discretion is advised.

13:01, 1st quarter: OK, first pass play: Did you hear Troy Polamalu got a concussion? Poor guy. Wait, who am I talking to? Just shut up and hope Roy Williams doesn't drop the ball.

12:17, 1st quarter: Goodness gracious, Devin Hester is fa-ast! Crap, I'd better heave it out there before it's too late. [4.3 seconds later ...] Touchdown! I hope Kristin saw that one.

9:06, 1st quarter: All right, this time I just hand it to Matt Forte and he runs the other way. Uh oh, now he's coming back this way. I'd better block someone. Gulp—that's Jared Allen. Pleasenoconcussion pleasenoconcussion pleasenoconcussion ... [CRUNCH]. Whew. That was definitely worth ... hold on, we LOST 2 yards?! That's it, no more blocking. Not unless Matt cuts me in on that contract extension.

6:41, 2nd quarter: LOL, they totally fell for that play fake! I'm sooo slick. Now, who's that receiver I'm looking for? Sasquatch? Sacajawea? That guy needs a nickname. [Fires a strike to the end zone.] Touchdown! Did I return those pink pants? I can't believe Kristin made me wear those.

12:47, 3rd quarter: Can you believe I've gone more than a half without being sa- ... OOF! Oh, for crying out loud. Don't panic. Just don't fum- ... dangit! Yikes, Lovie's gonna be fuuurious.

9:02, 3rd quarter: Two sacks of Donovan McNabb in three plays! Oops, maybe I should stop cheering—it's bad karma. And is that his mom leaving the stadium already? I thought she was bringing us Chunky soup after the game. Sad face. =(

6:29, 3rd quarter: Argh, I can't believe Sarsparilla dropped that third-and-5 pass. Quick, what would Peyton Manning do? Oh yeah, yell at him. "Hey Sand Dollar, do that again and I'll have Kristin paint your toenails every week for a year!" Man, it's tough being a leader.

15:00, 4th quarter: Et tu, Matt Spaeth?! You owe me a touchdown. And I am so not coming to your Halloween party.

Approximately 3 a.m.: Oh, Sanzenbacher—THAT'S that guy's name!

1 What's inspiring Matt Forte's career year?	Not what, whom: Walter Payton.	The Bears put up a bunch of motivational posters around Soldier Field.	He's haunted by Papa Bear Halas. Not interested in wooden nickels as payment for performance.	Like most of America: Hugh Jackman's inspiring performance as a single father in "Real Steel."	To quote Randy Moss: "straight cash, homey."
2 Devin Hester is to kick returns as ...	... kickers who kick to him are to the unemployment line.	... Willie Nelson isn't to tax returns.	... the Cubs are to losing. History in the making!	... Gertrude Stein is to cubist writing. That means he's good at it. Morons.	... Buffy was to vampire slaying. She saved the world; Hester saves the Bears. A lot.
3 Now that the Detroit Lions have one loss ...	... Ndamukong Suh has been angered, thus only a battle with Rodan can settle him down.	... someone is probably going to make a lame Rodan joke.	... they're happy not to meet up with the 49ers and Jim Harbaugh again.	... we can go back to citing Detroit's rebirth with things that matter, like business planning, and not football.	... Lions fans are fighting the instinctive urge to buy head-size paper bags.
4 What were 49ers coach Jim Harbaugh and Lions coach Jim Schwartz fighting about Sunday?	Whether Beyonce's baby bump is fake. People, Jay-Z had a part in this pregnancy, so it's more of a baby hump.	Pop vs. soda. And then Harbaugh stupidly threw "Coke" into the debate.	Harbaugh was mad the Wolverines suffered their first loss of the season and blamed Schwartz.	Arguing Herman Cain's presidential bid or "who's the biggest schmobag?" We're thinking No. 2.	Whether a fourth "Transformers" movie is really necessary. (Spoiler alert: no.)
5 Let's have your World Series prediction.	Rally squirrel's good eatin' in Texas. Rangers in six.	Chicago Cubs over the Dubai Hovercrafts in 2047.	The Cubs in ... wait, are they even still in the majors? Maybe that's why Theo Epstein is so confused.	Thousands drinking Busch Light and people spinning tires on dirt roads. That means Cards in six.	That thing hiding underneath Tony La Russa's cap will be revealed. I think it's a muskrat.

Dwight leaves the door open

Dwight Howard might be trying to tell the rest of the league something.

In an Esquire magazine interview released Monday, the All-NBA center said playing for a big-market franchise could appeal to him if he becomes a free agent next summer. Howard's contract runs through 2012-13, but he can terminate the contract one year early and become a free agent in 2012.

"There's more you can do in a bigger place," Howard told the mag. "I'm stuck in a tough position because I feel like right now, where I'm at, I've done so much. And I just don't know what else I can do. I can't live for everybody else.

"I don't know what decision I'm gonna make as of right now. It's been crazy. Everybody wants me to come here, come play here, come to our team, do this. It's a great feeling, though, to be wanted."

Hear that, Bulls management? Sounds like a guy who might want to play next to the reigning league MVP, Derrick Rose. You might want to get on that.

What else ya got?

There's been no real progress to report in the Theo Epstein compensation talks, and no apparent sense of urgency by Boston to get a deal done quickly, sources told the Tribune on Monday. The buzz is that compensation requests have been all over the map. The Boston Globe reported Monday that right-hander Trey McNutt, the Cubs' top pitching prospect, is one of the names being discussed. And ESPNChicago.com reported that the Red Sox had asked for right-hander Matt Garza in exchange for Epstein, but the Cubs refused.

FACEOFF: MELT VS. CHEESIE'S

cheese FIGHT!

Which grilled cheese cafe will win sandwich lovers' loyalty?

By Erin Brereton

FOR REDEYE

As a kid, it was a cafeteria classic. Now, it's a perfectly passable dinner on a lazy weeknight. Yes, we're talking about your friend and mine, the grilled cheese sandwich.

Back in 2008, the 44th Ward Dinner Party billed itself as Chicago's first grilled cheese bar. (One person who won't ever forget that is RedEye staffer Matt Pais, who ate his way through the whole sandwich menu in one seating during opening weekend.) It closed last summer, but luckily for cheese lovers, the grilled cheese movement lives on.

Filling the void are Melt Sandwich Shoppe (1840 N. Damen Ave. 773-292-6358, which opened in Bucktown last week, and late-night Lakeview sandwich spot Cheesie's Pub & Grub (958 W. Belmont Ave. 773-388-1574), which opened in May. How do the two stack up? See for yourself in this very cheesy showdown. ERIN BRERETON IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR. ADDITIONAL REPORTING BY MATT PAIS AND EMILY VAN ZANDT.

FYI New quick-serve cafe Beezee's is now open at 2807 N. Sheffield Ave. in Lincoln Park.

The look
Melt: Schoolhouse-inspired, with brightly hued cafeteria chairs, bookshelves and even a couple of vintage desks. A giant chalkboard wall dressed with gilded frames serves as the menu.
Cheesie's: Pub-meets-art gallery, if the art were all about grilled cheese. Recent additions include a Sistine Chapel-inspired mural of God handing Adam a grilled cheese and a framed image of dogs playing poker with stacks of sandwiches instead of chips.
Advantage: Melt. The cool-school decor is more polished than Cheesie's pub vibe.

The story

Melt: A pregnant friend's cravings for grilled cheese inspired Dion Antic, who also runs Porkchop in the West Loop, to create a family-friendly sandwich shop. "Bucktown needs something [where you wouldn't] feel weird if you brought your kid in," he says.

Cheesie's: After trying to find a place serving grilled cheese when out with a friend last year, owner Chris Johnston wondered: Why hadn't anyone created a restaurant that served variations of the celebrated sandwich? By January, he'd quit his job as general manager at Wrigleyville bar Rockwood Place to begin planning Cheesie's. "Grilled cheese brings people back to their childhood," he says.

Advantage: Tie. Both owners were similarly inspired, and though Antic's decades of experience outnumber Johnston's, his spots (from Iggy's to Rockstar Dogs to the Shady Lady) aren't known for their longevity.

The crowd

Melt: Bucktown couples, Damen Avenue boutique shoppers and neighborhood parents with kids in tow. Doors close at the early hour of 7 p.m.

Cheesie's: Bargoers craving a midnight snack. Cheesie's is open until midnight during the week and as late as 5 a.m. Saturday. On week-ends, a late-night line often snakes out the door.

Advantage: Cheesie's. You can get lunch, dinner or a late-night meal—and have grilled cheese for a Sunday morning breakfast.

The sandwiches

Melt: 15. Gourmet combos of artisan cheese and meats, including the Appleton (cheddar, pepper jack, Muenster and sliced red apple on a baguette, $7.95; $9.95 with black forest ham), are served with soup or chips.

Cheesie's: 8. The menu features seven sandwiches stuffed with extras such as steak fries, jalapenos or bacon, and served with different dipping sauces for $5.95. One sandwich of the month (such as The Tenderizer with chicken tenders, bacon, cheddar, mozzarella, and barbecue and hot sauce on Texas toast) usually goes for $6.95-$7.95. At $4, microbrews are a deal too.

Advantage: Tie. By the numbers, Melt wins, but it's hard not to favor Cheesie's, where you can get a sandwich and beer for 10 bucks.

The taste

Melt: Unfortunately, Melt's decor is more notable than its flavors. The Kansas City ($8.95, barbecue chicken with blue cheese and celery on ciabatta) was average but light on crunch; the three-cheese Appleton came out room temperature, lacking texture and melted gooeyness that really makes you feel like a kid again.

Cheesie's: More is more with Cheesie's over-stuffed sandwiches. The Frenchie (American and mozzarella cheese with bacon, chives and thick-cut French fries on sourdough bread) is pure nostalgia with the perfect crunch outside and plenty of gooey cheese inside.

Advantage: Cheesie's. The right juxtaposition of crunchy and melty is what makes grilled cheese oh-so-good.

THE WINNER

Cheesie's. We'll leave Melt to the kiddies for now.

chic Chicago

Forget other fashion weeks—
it's time to light up our runways

Tribune Newspapers

Fashion Focus Chicago launched its annual celebration of the city's fashion scene Monday with two logistical touch-ups to this year's headlining shows.

First, a consistent $35 general admission price applies to each of the four shows in the Millennium Park tent this year. Second, all ticket-holders get seats—no standing room-only crowds craning their necks from far corners.

"And the back row is going to be elevated seating, so there's not a bad seat in the house," said Kiran Advani, fashion programming director for the Chicago Office of Tourism and Culture, which coordinates the events.

New to the Millennium Park tent this year is the Vert Couture eco-friendly fashion show Thursday, which in the previous two years was off-site. Among its participants are men's luxury underwear designer Richard Dayhoff, who uses recycled polyester fibers; Dollparts by Michelle Dimitris, who reclaims vintage garments for flirty pieces; and Heart (1), a collaboration of Jenny Greco, Christina Noel and Lisa Selby, who imprint photographic images of nature on organic cotton, silk and bamboo.

VIP tickets for headlining shows will range from $80 to $95 and include priority seating as well as admission to a preshow reception at 6 p.m. nightly with refreshments.

Here's a glimpse of this week's events. For more details see chicagofashionresource.com.

MORE INFO

All the headlining shows start at 7:30 p.m. under the tent at Millennium Park, 201 E. Randolph St. Beyond the tent will be more than 30 other trunk shows, shopping events, seminars and parties throughout the week.

No show for you

Who's missing out on "SNL"? New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg. After Fred Armisen showed up as Bloomberg in an Occupy Wall Street sketch Saturday, the mayor told the New York Daily News: "I have my SAG card. I think [Lorne Michaels would] find that my agent could negotiate a rate with him that he could afford." Doesn't he have enough going on?

'SATURDAY NIGHT FEVER

By Dana Moran

REDEYE

After kicking off its 37th (whoa!) season with pairings such as Alec Baldwin/Radiohead and Ben Stiller/Foster the People, "Saturday Night Live" is looking for the wow factor. After all, who wasn't excited to see Derek Zoolander when Stiller hosted, or Nicki Minaj popping in for a guest spot on Drake's performance? We did our math homework on recently announced "SNL" hosts and musical guests to see how these matches might add up. NOV. 5

Charlie Day

Maroon 5

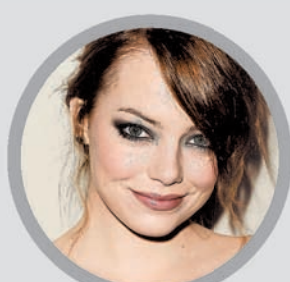

Jennifer Aniston

EQUALS

A sketch involving a plot to knock off "SNL" creator Lorne Michaels. Since Aniston, Day's horrible boss in, um, "Horrible Bosses," probably won't be around, he'll need a new target. And Maroon frontman Adam Levine is certainly jacked enough to do the job.

NOV. 12

Emma Stone

Coldplay

Stage fright

EQUALS

Stone as Gwyneth Paltrow. Since it's the second time around for both Stone and Chris Martin's band, surely none of them will have any anxiety about her stepping into the role of his GOOPY wife. Organic hand-painted free trade wallpaper, anyone?

NOV. 19

Jason Segel

Florence + the Machine

Jim Henson

EQUALS

An all-Muppets episode of "SNL"—and a whole lot of nervous grinning from Segel, who's directing and starring in the new flick. Who'll make a better Muppet: flame-haired singer Florence Welch, or cast member Keenan Thompson? Nobody loses!

DEC. 17

Jimmy Fallon

Michael Buble

Justin Bieber

EQUALS

A whole lot of viral videos. Fallon and Buble both have dressed as the purple-hooded fantasy in recent months, so we're predicting a teen dream-off—thankfully Bieb's got some new Christmas songs to mock.

Kiss cam

What do you do to pass the time at a red light? If you're Eva Mendes and Ryan Gosling (above), you sneak in a kiss. The new couple put the P in PDA on Sunday when they locked lips in front of photographers in Hollywood, eonline.com reports. The sexy twosome co-star in "Place Beyond the Pines," due out in 2013. We expect great chemistry!

Revenge of the sequel

Shia LaBeouf may soon be eating his words. Thr.com reports "Transformers" director Michael Bay and Hasbro are in talks for a fourth flick in the series ... tootally not a shocker since the Chicago-filmed "Transformers: Dark of the Moon" is the fourth-highest-grossing movie world-wide—ever. LaBeouf told the AP in July that he was done with the series, but we'll see what cash money has to say about that.

THE DIGIT

11 MILLION

That's the cumulative number of viewers for the 8 p.m., 9:30 p.m. and 11:30 p.m. airings of AMC's "The Walking Dead" Season 2 premiere Sunday, according to Nielsen. The 8 p.m. first showing was watched by 7.3 million viewers, Variety reports.

HAIR OF THE

In order to get her role in "Girl With the Dragon Tattoo," Rooney Mara had to get hammered. Really, really hammered. In a cover story for Vogue, Mara told the mag that director David Fincher said: "Go out and get really, really drunk and come in the next morning so we can take pictures of you" to show the studio how strung-out she could look. "And I did it!" she adds. "Threw up all night!" If that's all it takes to get a part...
